Table 8-3  Policies of Selected American Third Parties since 1864

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Party</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Populist</td>
<td>This pro-farmer party of the 1890s advocated progressive reforms. It also advocated replacing gold with silver as the basis of the currency in hopes of creating a mild inflation in prices. (It was believed by many that inflation would help debtors and stimulate the economy.)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Socialist</td>
<td>This party advocated a “cooperative commonwealth” based on government ownership of industry. It was pro-labor, often antiwar, and in later years, anti-Communist. It was dissolved in 1972 and replaced by nonparty advocacy groups (Democratic Socialists of America and Social Democrats USA).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Communist</td>
<td>This left-wing breakaway from the Socialists was the U.S. branch of the worldwide Communist movement. The party was pro-labor and advocated full equality for African Americans. It was also closely aligned with the Communist-led Soviet Union, which provoked great hostility among most Americans.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Progressive</td>
<td>This name was given to several successive splinter parties built around individual political leaders. Theodore Roosevelt, who ran in 1912, advocated federal regulation of industry to protect consumers, workers, and small businesses. Robert LaFollette, who ran in 1924, held similar views.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>American Independent</td>
<td>Built around George Wallace, this party opposed any further promotion of civil rights and advocated a militant foreign policy. Wallace’s supporters were mostly former Democrats who were soon to be Republicans.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Libertarian</td>
<td>This party opposes most government activity.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reform</td>
<td>The Reform Party was initially built around businessman H. Ross Perot but later was taken over by others. Under Perot, the party was a middle-of-the-road group opposed to federal budget deficits. Under Patrick Buchanan, it came to represent right-wing nationalism and opposition to free trade.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Green</td>
<td>The Greens are a left-of-center pro-environmental party. They are also generally hostile to globalization.</td>

Party Identification from 1944 to the Present

![Graph showing party identification from 1944 to 2012. The graph displays the percentage of voters identifying as Democratic, Republican, or Independent over time.]

What do you predict the Republican party will have to do to align with the Tea Party movement?
What will the Democratic and Republican parties have to do in order to attract independent voters in the future?
In your opinion, would federal funding of political parties limit the amount of exposure and influence that large donors have over the party platform and message of either party?
Is the time right for a third party candidate that is moderate, socially liberal, but fiscally conservative? If so, what would be the appropriate time to run for office?
Questions for Critical Thinking

★ Is party identification only a useful indicator when the party is popular and doing well in the polls?
In your opinion, which of the three faces of a party is most important and why?
